

INSTRUCCIONES y PUNTUACIÓN

Conteste a las preguntas de tipo test (25 en total) en la hoja de lectura óptica. Al final del examen, entregue ÚNICAMENTE la hoja de lectura óptica y LA ÚLTIMA HOJA de este examen, en cuyo reverso escribirá las redacciones. Asegúrese de que sus datos personales aparecen en ambas hojas. Puede llevarse el resto del examen.

Esta prueba escrita se califica en total sobre 10 puntos:

- Las preguntas con respuesta múltiple ("multiple choice questions") valen 5 puntos. Con cada respuesta correcta en el test obtiene 0.20 puntos. Cada respuesta incorrecta resta 0.06 puntos

- Las redacciones ("compositions") valen 5 puntos. Para ser evaluadas, cada una debe contar con un mínimo de 80 palabras, y entre las dos, sumar al menos 200 palabras.

Se superará la prueba escrita si se obtienen 3 puntos en las preguntas con respuesta múltiple y 3 puntos en las redacciones, como mínimo.

Are any foods safe to eat anymore?

Food was once seen as a source of sustenance and pleasure. Today, the dinner table can instead begin to feel like a minefield. Worse still, the advice changes continually. As TV-cook Nigella Lawson recently put it: "You can guarantee that what people think will be good for you this year, they won't next year." This may be somewhat inevitable: evidence-based health advice should be constantly updated as new studies explore the nuances of what we eat and the effects the meals have on our bodies. But when the media exaggerate the results of a study without providing the context, it can lead to unnecessary fears that may, ironically, push you towards less healthy choices. We've tried to cut through the confusion by weighing up all the available evidence to date. You may be pleased to learn that many of your favourite foods are not the ticking time bomb you have been led to believe.

The food: Bacon

The fear: Processed meats are as dangerous as cigarettes.

The facts: While the World Health Organisation has announced overwhelming evidence that bacon (and other kinds of processed meat) can contribute to colorectal cancer, the real dangers are not quite as worrying as the subsequent headlines would have us believe. For every 100 people who stop eating bacon, only one will have avoided cancer. To put that in perspective, consider the figures for tobacco: for every 100 smokers who give up, 10-15 lives may be saved. The two are hardly comparable.

The food: Coffee

The fear: Our caffeine addiction will drive us to a heart attack.

The facts: There is very little evidence that a cup of coffee will send you to an early grave; in fact, the opposite may be true. In 2012, the New England Journal of Medicine reported on the health of 400,000 Americans over the course of 13 years. The scientists found that people who drank between three and six cups a day were around 10% less likely to die during the 13-year period, with lower rates of heart disease, stroke, diabetes and infections. A review in 2014 painted a similar picture: people who drank four cups a day were around 16% less likely to die at any one time. Note that these were only observational studies. Although they tried to account for other factors, there's no way of knowing if the coffee itself was protecting the heart, or if there's some other, hidden, explanation. Perhaps healthier people are just more likely to be drawn to coffee. But as "addictions" go, it's pretty harmless. It's probably not the elixir of life that some claim, but based on this evidence, you can at least savour that morning espresso with impunity.

Sustenance: Something (in this case, food) that keeps a person alive.
